Really so what do you call a guy that pitches up at your office double parks behind a car with tattoos all down his arms threatening and forcing people to hand over their vehicles, and when you do a check on them they work for the same bank who they owe twice as much as the value of your car because their boat which was financed by that bank was impounded because of perlemoen, a saint I guess not

Mr Roets calling tracers "many of whom are little more than gangsters who would lie, threaten and cajole indebted consumers just to lay their hands on the vehicles that the banks wanted to repossess" is a bit rough. Many people have the same idea about many lawyers.
